NEW SURPRISE IN SIMON LEAD

MINA, Nev., Jan. 7.—The Simon Silver-lead mine has again come to the fore with two of those surprises for which it is becoming famous. The first of these occurred on the last day of the old year, when the final round of shots on the 400-foot level in the east drift beyond the big fault exposed a two-foot vein of high grade ore. This ore is identical in value and appearance with the ore exposed on the 300-foot level, and is manifestly a segment of the same ledge, thus proving the continuance of the orebody for at least another hundred feet in depth.

Further work in this drift has been discontinued for the present, as the management has determined to concentrate on the sinking of the shaft to at least the 600-foot level. In prospecting this sinking the second of the surprises occurred at about thirty feet below the 400-foot station where a vein was opened up about one foot wide which assayed over $40 per ton. The vein has, since widened out to about two and one-half feet, and is the more remarkable because of the fact that the shaft is supposed to be over twenty feet in on the footwall.

The Silver-lead company has purchased a number of houses at nearby camps, and is moving them in and refitting them, in order to provide accommodations for the rapidly increasing force of employees.

The camp is an exceedingly busy place these days, as everything possible is being done to insure the comfort of everyone. A postoffice and a school have been placed in commission, and the residents are prepared to face the winter storms without a quail.

The retrimming of the shaft is finished, and the surface equipment for hoisting will be ready for work in a day or two. It is the intention of the company to continue sinking the shaft until the water level is reached, before starting and drifting.
